About the Area:

Locmalo is a commune in the Morbihan department of Brittany, in north-western France.

Morbihan Breton: Mor-Bihan, Breton pronunciation is a department in Brittany, situated in the northwest of France. It is named after the Morbihan (small sea in Breton), the enclosed sea that is the principal feature of the coastline.

It is noted for its Carnac stones. These predate and are more extensive than the ancient Stonehenge monument in Wiltshire, England that is more familiar to English speakers.

Three major military educational facilities are located in Guer, including École Spéciale Militaire de Saint-Cyr, the national military academy for officers.

Morbihan is part of the region of Brittany; it is surrounded by the departments of Finistère, Côtes-d'Armor, Ille-et-Vilaine, and Loire-Atlantique, and the Atlantic Ocean on the southwest.

The Gulf of Morbihan has many islands: 365 according to legend. There are actually between 30 and 40, depending on how they are counted. There are also many islets that are too small for any development.

Of these islands, all but two are privately owned: l'île-aux-Moines and l'île-d'Arz. Owners of the others include movie stars, fashion designers, and other wealthy "glitterati".

in the department of Morbihan, but outside the Gulf, there are four inhabited islands: Belle ile, Groix, Houat, Hoëdic.

Meaban, an island just outside the Port du Crouesty, is an ornithological reserve. Visitors are forbidden there.

The largest towns in Morbihan are Vannes and Lorient.

Averages temperatures range from lows of 3 degrees Celsius to highs of 23 degrees Celsius.
